4. Group Reflection

Our meeting was planned early, immediately after receiving the instructions for the activity. The group coordinated online to set the schedule, assign roles, and prepare materials such as the flashcards and discussion flow. Each member had a specific role: host, main speakers, participants, and note-taker, which helped ensure the session was organized and effective.

One of the main challenges we faced was time coordination. Some members had personal commitments, causing a few to join late, and the meeting time had to be adjusted by a few minutes to accommodate everyone. Despite this, the group managed the situation smoothly through clear communication and flexibility. The note-taker provided summaries in the chat box, allowing late participants to catch up without interrupting the discussion.

Through this activity, we learned that successful online collaboration requires preparation, clear communication, and adaptability. Tools like chat boxes and shared notes helped maintain organization and productivity. Overall, the experience demonstrated that with teamwork and coordination, even online meetings with minor challenges can be efficient, engaging, and productive.
